"We recognize Waterfront Development's inherent strengths in project management and its strong relationships with rural communities," said Geoff MacLellan, Minister of Business. "Now, as Develop Nova Scotia, its mandate will include the entire province, working closely with all of our municipalities to help us grow our economy in strong, vibrant communities." Develop Nova Scotia will begin immediate work on an internet implementation plan. The Crown will begin hiring the technical expertise it requires to move quickly on high-speed internet, as well as additional resources to support its expanded mandate. Beginning in August, Develop Nova Scotia will meet with municipalities, regional economic development agencies and local industry. The sessions will focus on internet and strategic economic infrastructure. Mr. MacLellan said he expects Develop Nova Scotia to roll out its internet plan later this fall. Legislation to formally create a new Crown is also expected in the fall.

Age-Friendly Communities in Nova Scotia
Government is supporting several projects that help older Nova Scotians live safely, enjoy good health and stay involved in their communities. Seniors Minister Leo Glavine opened the call for applications for the Age-Friendly Communities Grant program, July 11, at the Waverley Legion. The Age-Friendly Communities Grant supports projects that promote healthy, active living and make communities better places for Nova Scotians as they age. The grant is open to non-profit and community organizations, municipal governments, associations and universities. Successful applicants can include partnerships or collaborative projects. This year, government has increased the threshold for funding to up to $25,000 per project. Applications are accepted year-round. Applications received on or before Sept. 30 will be reviewed in October. Applications received between Oct. 1, 2018 and Feb. 1, 2019 will be reviewed in February.
