Antigonish Company Releases World Leading Voice Recognition Software

World-leading voice recognition software is being built in small town Nova Scotia. "And why not?" said Shawn Wilkie, President of DragonVeterinary.com. "We don't have to be in Silicon Valley to develop world leading software. Given a good internet connection and some great people we can grow a world class company out of Nova Scotia."

DragonVeterinary.com launched its voice recognition software for veterinarians six months ago. The software, built in Nova Scotia, allows veterinarians to transcribe notes by voice instead of by typing.

scribe notes by voice instead of by typing.

It is sold as an add-on to a voice recognition software for medical doctors owned by Massachusetts based technology company Nuance Communications.

DragonVeterinary.com sent a team from Nova Scotia to the London Vet Show 2016 in late November in England to promote the new product throughout the English speaking world.

DragonVeterinary.com worked with a team of veterinary radiologists lead by Dr. Brian Potect of Houston Texas to develop their software. "A busy day for me would be reading 25 cases," said Potect. "With this software I can read 100+ cases and still have time to get home and enjoy my family."

DragonVeterinary.com is owned by Nova Scotia based OceanLab IT Innovations Inc., which is the parent company for Robotnik – an IT professional services company that employs 20 full-time staff at its offices in Antigonish and Bayers Lake. For more information visit www.dragonveterinary.com
