Year 2014 Comes To Wentworth

By Hope Bridgewater

Martha Wilson and Eleanor Sprague, organized a New Year's celebration, which might be unusual in some areas, but certainly not in Wentworth. The event involved members of 14 families whose names are most often associated with Wentworth. Family names represented were: Patriquin, DeLong, Smith, Sprague, Forbes, Bridgewater, McMaster, Fiddes, Gilroy, Wilson, Curry, Murray, Gower, Tyler Shaw presented Ken with replica of a prehistoric trackway found in the cliffs of East Bay. Ken observed the trackway of a small prehistoric reptile or amphibian high on the cliff about three years ago while touring with his family.

Tyler Shaw is publishing a paper as part of his degree at the University of Alberta along with Dr. John Calder of the NS Department of Natural Resources, who assisted with the naming of the find after Ken. The original is approximately more than three feet long, but they didn't think Ken's house could hold a copy quite that large.

from Ireland, England, and Wales to the Atlantic Provinces, Quebec, and the New England States.

Another Scots theme was the singing of "Auld Lang Syne," a poem written by Robert Burns in 1788 and sung to the tune of a Scots folk song. Loosely translated, the Scots language of "Auld Lang Syne" means long, long ago or in memory of times long ago. In Scotland it was the custom to sing "Auld Lang Syne" at the stroke of midnight on New Year's Eve and from there it spread elsewhere, mostly to English-speaking countries and communities.

Two other games played were of more recent origin in the 20th century: "Sequence," a board and card game, and "King's Cribbage," a board game combining cribbage and crossword puzzle techniques.

Those attending brought food and around 10:30 p.m. the feast was laid out on a long table plus side-table and people stopped to eat and chat. Then, at midnight folks gathered in a circle to sing "Auld Lang Syne" and several gave rhythmic kicks at the end, all done in the hope of each one having a fortunate year in 2014.

Setting Goals Involve Process and Outcome

By Christine Urquhart

Here it is end of January and our thoughts turn to those New Year Resolutions! If you ask most people, their number one item is to lose weight. "Probably nothing in the world arouses more false hopes than the first four hours of a diet." - Samuel Beckett.

It is hard to lose weight especially when we can find so many excuses not to "diet" or "exercise". We need to get smart about our weight loss and set some goals. Nothing is done with a magic wand! We need a plan! Starting a fitness program? Don't get carried away.

Working out too intensely or too often boosts your chances of injury and burnout. Remember to alternate hard workouts with easier ones. And plan time between sessions for your body to rest and recover. Talk to your Doctor before starting any exercise program, even walking three times a week. Once you are ready, set those goals!

When setting goals, think about process and outcome.

Process goals are most important because changing your habits (processes) is key to success. "Exercise regularly" is an example of a process goal, while "lose 30 pounds" is an example of an outcome goal. Also, make sure your goals are SMART: specific, measurable, attainable, relevant and time-limited. An example of a SMART goal is aiming to walk for 30 minutes a day, five days a week for the next month and logging your results. You will be surprised at your results.

First, with a "short" attainable goal you will not feel so discouraged. Secondly, you will feel better about yourself because you were able to attain this goal and so will be able to set another realistic goal and continue to improve your health and your self image.

Remember, a true diet is a change of lifestyle, not a temporary starvation technique so you can fit into those old jeans!
