Atlantic Premiers Discuss Priorities

Atlantic Canadian Premiers held a conference call in advance of the meeting of Canadian premiers to focus on federal-provincial relations, health care funding, pharmacare, labour and immigration, and natural resource development, including Atlantic Canada's role as a leader in clean energy.

The Premiers were united in calling on the federal government to ensure that health care funding recognizes the changing demographics of Atlantic Canada; the importance of the resource sector to the Atlantic and broader Canadian economies, and their shared commitment to develop and maintain a competitive regulatory regime to attract international investment. The Premiers also renewed their commitment to working together to develop new clean and reliable electricity generation and improve transmission networks, including working with the federal government on the development of a Clean Power Roadmap for Atlantic Canada.

Direct Flights from China in 2020

Early in the fall of 2020 Nova Scotia will welcome visitors from China on two direct charter flights. China Southern Airlines will fly from the city of Guangzhou to Halifax, bringing hundreds of tourists who will tour Nova Scotia, along with New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Premier Stephen McNeil said, "These flights are the first step in securing regular air access from Guangdong and other regions of China to Nova Scotia and the rest of our region.

The province has a goal of attracting 50,000 Chinese visitors annually by 2024.

Sales of Flavoured E-Cigarettes banned

April 1, 2020, Nova Scotia will ban the sale of flavoured e-cigarettes and juices. Nova Scotia is one of the first provinces to announce measures to address vaping and the only province to announce a full flavour ban. In a recent survey conducted by Smoke Free Nova Scotia, 95 per cent of young people in Nova Scotia who vape said they prefer flavoured juices and over 48 per cent said they would quit if flavours were banned.

In a 2016-17 survey, 37 per cent of Nova Scotia students in grades 7 to 12 had tried vaping at least once, the highest rate in Canada. More than half of youth and young adults identify flavour and smell as the primary reason for trying vaping products.

Misleading Story on Forestry Practices

(Editor's Note: Tom Taggart, who is Colchester County councillor for District 10 has been a one of four Nova Scotia representatives on the Federation of Canadian Municipalities (FCM) Board of Directors for the last six years. He was recently at a FCM meeting in Ottawa, and has a report elsewhere in this issue. I asked him to advise of other FCM issues which will impact Nova Scotia, particularly Colchester County areas. He brought to our attention a very misleading Forest Management story which was published on Page 1 of the Globe & Mail, December 4th issue. Below is a copy of an email from Derek Nighbor, President and CEO, Forest Products Association of Canada and a subsequent press release. We have reached out to several people to get a copy of the Globe & Mail story. If it is obtained prior to press time, we will include in an area adjacent to this information on page 13.)

Subject: Globe and Mail Story Misleads on Today's Forest Management - Statement from FPAC

Good afternoon,

We wanted to ensure that a number of our municipal partners across the country received FPAC's statement in response to a poorly reported story on the front page of The Globe and Mail on December 4th regarding forest practices in Canada.

What was not reported in the story is that it was based on outdated practices from 40 years ago in Northwestern Ontario – and in very misleading fashion, that sample was then extrapolated to the entire boreal forest.

Misleading report fails to understand Canada's 21st century forest sector; ignores role forests play in helping to fight climate change

For Immediate Release

December 4, 2019 (Ottawa, Ontario) – Derek Nighbor, President and CEO of the Forest Products Association of Canada (FPAC) issued the following statement regarding the Wildlands League report on forest practices:

Canada is an undisputed global leader in sustainable forest management. For more than 100 years, the forest sector has played a fundamental role in Canada's economy. Forests are part of our history, our geography, our homes, and our transportation.

Today, the sector is in the midst of a transformation that is bringing forward innovative new products, diversified markets, enhanced environmental credentials, and a skilled workforce.

A key role we are playing in fighting climate change is using wood products as alternatives to higher carbon intensive products such as cement and single use plastics.

Regrettably, this report overlooks the innovative, sustainable and inclusive nature of Canada's forest sector in the 21st century, and it does not acknowledge the positive solutions-based role we're playing across the board.

Wildlands League purposely exaggerates the impacts of forestry. The report focuses on practices from 30 years ago in a single region and extrapolates them to all of Canada. In fact, road areas and non-regenerated landings are significantly lower today. The report is also somewhat biased since areas where roads are replanted into forests are obviously not accessible by truck.

What was also not disclosed was that well known anti-forestry advocates who are interested in locking down land were behind the report, and that the Cement Association of Canada provided funding for the group's field work.

As architects, engineers, and community planners turn in greater numbers to the lower carbon benefits of building with wood in Canada and around the world, my global colleagues and I are starting to see some interesting bedfellows in the advocacy space.

That said, Forest Products Association of Canada (FPAC) prides itself in a solutions-based, collaborative approach to our work in Ottawa and across the country. Over 90% of the lands upon which our members operate are public lands. Over 40% of our working forest across the boreal is under some form of conservation measure. In working with our on-the-ground partners, we have an important stewardship responsibility and at the same time create family-supporting jobs for communities that need them.

As you are aware, forestry in Canada is about planning for and managing many different values and finding balance.

Our technical team is doing a line by line review of the report and will be prepared to share a more detailed assessment with interested decision-makers in the weeks ahead.

I wanted to reach out to correct the record.

Feel free to contact me directly if you have any questions or comments.

*Sincerely,
Derek Nighbor, President and CEO
