Cape Chignecto Park OUR LARGEST PROVINCIAL PARK

Most day tours go to the famous Three Sisters rock formation. (Photo novashores.com)

Cape Chignecto Provincial Park- Located on a dramatic coastal peninsula on the Bay of Fundy at Advocate Harbour, Cape Chignecto is Nova Scotia’s largest Provincial Park. The 4200 hectare natural environment park features 29 kilometres of pristine coastline, old growth forests, rare plants and outstanding geological features.

The Park offers 60-kms of predominately coastal hiking trails, 50 plus backcountry hike-in wilderness campsites, 28 walk-in campsites, a wilderness cabin and an all-season bunkhouse, a visitor information/ interpretation centre and gift shop.

Because Cape Chignecto is a wilderness hiking and camping park, there are no drive-up camping sites although group camping is available, along with a cabin and a bunkhouse.

Visitors must register at the Red Rocks Visitor Centre on West Advocate Road prior to entering the Park. The Centre also offers interpretation, a gift shop, washrooms and a warm fire on a cool, wet day.

The Eatonville Day-Use area opened last summer. Located in the once thriving settlement of Eatonville Harbour, Cape Chignecto’s Day-Use area provides visitors with over 5-kilometres of accessible walking trails suitable for everyone including families and the physically challenged. Visitors to the day use area arrive via the West Apple River Road. While it seems like a long drive, the experience waiting at the top of the cliffs is well worth the adventure. The Three Sisters Interpretive Centre, a renewable energy building powered by solar panels, provides access to the trail system as well as information on the historical and geological significance of the area.

Two user-friendly trail systems offer an entire day of entertainment for park visitors. One trail takes visitors to the famous Three Sisters, three magnificent sea-stacks, engulfed in local folklore.

The second trail leads to Squally Point, an actual raised beach that was created thousands of years ago when glaciers covered much of this area. There are rest and picnic areas along the trail systems and seven professionally engineered viewing platforms offering spectacular views of the upper Bay of Fundy as well as interpretive information.

For more information on Cape Chignecto, visit the website at www.capechignecto.net or call 392-2085. For reservations call 1-888-544-3434 or book on-line at novascotiaparks.ca.
