

Projects – Not All Horsing Around

ordered Great Village t-shirts from the Community Association. "These shirts are awesome. Everyone should order one of these from our

The day of the interview, filming was centered around the construction of a book nook. The brothers had designed a decorative archway made from repurposed encyclopedias. It was amazing to see how quickly a stack of books and wooden wedges became a cool piece of functional artwork.

The renovation projects are all fully functional and not just props for the television series. The hall has been used for friends and family to gather over the last year, including a new year's party. "We hope to someday make it available for the community, but with our filming and for safety reasons, it is not possible right now," says Andrew.

During a lunch break from filming, Andrew was pleased to give a tour of the multi-story building. The projects bar from last season is still the central location for brain storming new ideas and not far away is one of the new projects, currently in the planning stages. "We are planning to have horse racing around the center of the room," laughs Andrew, as he shows how the motorized "horse" is being developed from repurposed mobility scooters.

The siblings never seem to run out of ideas, although projects can change mid-stream once the build is underway. As far as the future, Andrew doesn't know for certain, but says, "We would be happy to film Projects: In the House Season 3 if it all works out."
